

A Canary

To this person, in order to be happy, they crave quality time; periods of undivided attention, listening to the details of their day, share dreams and concerns.

A canary says, "Just be with me."

A cat is one who thrives on physical contact. Andrew says, "This can be a simple pat on the back, a quick back rub, a head scratch, a hug or a kiss. People who speak this dialect of physical contact tend to feel most loved when affection is expressed in this form."

A cat says "Touch me."

A puppy dog dialect is the person who feels loved by spoken words of approval.

Tell a puppy dog how wonderful he is and his whole body wags!

And praise is the way to teach this person most effectively. And a word of caution, NOTHING is more devastating than words of disapproval...puppies cower as if they are under attack.

What about Goldfish?

A goldfish feels love based purely on favors and deeds.

You can't really touch them.

They don't care if you are there or not, the goldfish just wants you to feed them and clean the bowl.

And oh yeah, straighten the castle while your there!"
